FIVE CENTS

Unite For A Long Hard Fight To Preserve Our Freedom!

Keynote address of Dean Clarence Manion before an enthusiastic audience of 3000, at the National States Rights Conference, Memphis, Tenn., Sept. 14, 1956.

My dear affectionate and over-indulgent friends: Monsignor Carney, Senator Evans, Mr. Bob Chandler, and patriotic Americans:

Many years ago back at Notre Dame we were at the point of what everybody hoped and prayed was the near end of what turned out to be an almost interminable football banquet. It was a quarter of two in the morning and our distinguished guest, a very prominent southerner, by the way, was just warming into the beginning of his address, when my old friend Knute Rockne leaned over to me and said, "Pat, you know I can forgive the public speaker who doesn't look at his watch, but the fellow I want to shoot is the guy who doesn't keep his eye on the calendar."

Now, I know what day it is. I sincerely hope that the people of America know what day it is. I am sure the people of this audience know what day it is. But for the benefit of everybody here and everywhere, let me say we are rapidly approaching the last days of life for American liberty. The calendar of our constitution tells us that! Any discerning person can learn that simply by looking at the calendar of political events. We are here at a very, very late day and hour. Nevertheless we can make up in determination, my friends, what we have lost in time; and if we are as determined as I believe we are, we can still strike the corpse of Constitutional Government in America and make it spring to its feet.

There are several important underscorings that need to be made with reference to this interstate conference. I want to tell you tonight of the essential relationship between the fight between communist subversion in this country, and the revival of constitutional states rights. A good many years ago a very notorious, and I am sure a thoroughly repentant ex-Communist told me this. He had escaped from the editorship of the Daily Worker and knew what he was talking about. He encountered me at Notre Dame and found me teaching Constitutional Law. He said, "Communism is not an economic system. Communism is a conspiratorial drive for tightly centralized government in the hands of Godless gangsters. Communism," he said, "must, as a prerequisite for success of its conquest, pull all powers of the government into one place (Washington, D. C.) first central control of police; second, central control of ballot boxes; third, central control of property, business; fourth, central control of the press; fifth, last but not least, central control of education." He said, "In this country the Constitution of the United States decentralizes the control of all of these things by constitutional mandate," and then he added, "As long as the constitutional doctrine of States Rights is maintained in this country, the communist conspiracy can never succeed."

Under the Constitution of this country,

T. Coleman Andrews
For President of the United States and the express language of the 10th Amendment, all powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution are reserved to the states and to the people. And among the things that are not delegated to the United States, among the powers and authorities that are reserved to the states and to the people in the states are the control of the police, the control of the voting ballot boxes, of property and business, of the press, and the control of education.

Unless we can maintain the decentralization of these controls, all of our efforts to frustrate the progress of the communist conspiracy will be lost. Unless, in other words, we can resurrect, reaffirm, reestablish and refurbish the constitutional doctrine of state's rights, over 40 billion dollars we spend every year to hold communism back from the far perimeters of the world is money gone down the drain.

Thomas H. Werdel
For Vice President of the United States

When communism comes to the United States of America it will come as it came to Czechoslovakia, as it came to Hungary, as it came to Roumania, as it came to Bulgaria and to every other of the 16 nations subjugated since World War II ended. It will come by the centralization of power in one place in each country and when those cen-

United States Day Oct. 23

U.S. Day Should Be Observed By Every Community In Our Land!

FIRST: To bring to the attention of all the people the fact that the people of this nation have enjoyed greater freedom and a higher standard of living than the people of any other nation in the history of the world.

And that these freedoms and standard of living have resulted from our form of government.

Ours is a form of government, which, under the Constitution and Bill of Rights, protects the individual and the States, and assures the independence and sovereignty of the nation.

It is an obligation of every loyal citizen to protect this heritage and pass it on to future generations.

SECOND: To awaken the American people to the fact that we are in grave danger of losing our freedoms and national sovereignty by the usurpation of individual and states rights by the federal government, and surrender of national sovereignty to internationalism.

As shocking as it may sound, we have already lost much that our forefathers fought and died to attain. By an arrogant usurpation of power, without the consent of the people or the Congress, the federal courts have changed the meaning of the Constitution. They have restricted the rights of individuals and of the states, contrary to all previous decisions of the courts. Likewise by the encroachments of the federal government, many of the freedoms and prerogatives of the States have been lost.

tralized powers are safely tucked away in one place, then a Marxist trained Communist stooge will grab those powers and subjugate that country. They will follow that pattern in the United States as in sixteen other nations. What is the remedy against this communist subversion? The revival, the re-establishment, the underscoring of Constitutional States Rights. For such protections that we have left against the success of this evil, communist, Godless conspiracy, we do not owe thanks to our present generation; we do not owe it to our Governors, our Congressmen, our Senators; we owe it to the foresight and the courage of the founding fathers of this Republic. In the 10th article of the Bill of Rights, the founding fathers of the United States said to us, finally and faithfully, what we could do in order to save America: "The enumeration in this constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage other rights retained by the people. The delegation in this constitution, the rights not delegated to the United States, are reserved to the states and to the people of the states."

Now, my friends, in our time and in our recollection we have heard a great deal — particularly when communism and fellow travelers were in trouble, we have heard a great deal about the 5th Amendment. This interstate conference is held now to remind the people of the 9th and 10th Amendments of the Constitution of the United States. And these were designed—not to protect communists—but to prevent the success of the Communist conspiracy in this Republic. Let us put this movement upon high ground. Let us understand the high purpose for which we are assembled here; and let us from New York, from my State of Indiana, from California, from Arizona, from all over the country, understand the community of interest we have in the protection of our republican form of government. The only defense against communist conspiracy; and let me repeat it again, and again and again—is the revival of Constitutional State's Rights.

Now why do we have to concern ourselves here with this extra-curricular political conference to underscore the obvious, to restate what has been stated so many times before? We have been called upon to do it, my friends, because the political leadership of both parties has run out on the Constitution of this country.

All of us, and I do mean all of us—have witnessed in whole or part a very spectacular and expensive demonstration in evasion at Chicago and at San Francisco. We have seen demonstrations and heard speeches and read platforms which are conspicuous for what they did not say, rather than what they did say. So much so that at a high point in one of these conventions a Governor of a Southern State managed to get the floor and said in that particular convention: "I have sat on the floor of this convention for four days and have yet to hear anybody say anything about State's Rights or Constitutional government." Eight days later, at the near-end of another convention, somebody might have gotten the floor and might have said, "I have sat in both conventions all the time, both day and night, and have yet to hear anybody say a thing about State's Rights or Constitutional Government." And so we had to come to Memphis, in an interstate conference, to tell the world that State's Rights and Constitutional Government are still important in this country and to our children and to the future generations in the world.

We have in this country what are known as Anti-trust Laws, which are directed against conspiracies, designed to prevent conspiracies in the restraint of trade and business. Many people have been prosecuted and some are in jails for conspiring to take things off the market, to agree on price-fixing, and to commit other shenanigans in restraint of free competition in business.

After having listened to both political conventions, I am constrained to believe that we ought to have some kind of anti-trust law against the restraint of political competition in this country; I think that there ought to be a law to prevent monopolistic political practices which take off the political market the products which the people want to buy, talk about and discuss. When two apparently competitive parties representing the people of the United States in Chicago and in San Francisco deliberately conspire to keep off political counters the things which are precious to the heart of America, I say the National Committee should be indicted for restraint of political trade.

One thing that was not conspicuous by its absence, was prominently underscored, accentuated, repeated over and over, was the attitude of hypocrisy. One of the freshest and brashest of these hypocritical utterances was made last night, which I heard on the radio as I drove home in my automobile. This came from one of the carbon-copy candidates for President. It might have come from either of them, but you know who spoke last night. Here is what he said: "If I could put my political philosophy in one phrase, it would be this: 'Trust the people; trust them with the great decisions.'" Now, my friends, let's take this great protestation very literally. Trust the people. Trust them with great decisions. And I say, Mr. Stevenson, "Amen,"—if you would only do it. I say, Mr. Stevenson, I dare you to trust the people with the decision of the Bricker Amendment, for instance, Mr. Stevenson, in the spirit of your own great statement, I dare you to trust the American people with the decision of foreign aid. Mr. Stevenson, I dare you to trust the American people on the question of whether we shall surrender American independence into the swamp of World Government. And last, but by no means least, but first Mr. Stevenson, I dare you to trust the American people with the decision of whether or not the federal government shall enforce civil rights in the states of the Union.

My friends, let us be perfectly frank, fearless and honest. We are here from the far reaches of this country. All of us have our local institutions which are near to our hearts, close to local administrations which we are determined to protect and preserve. A State's right to decide its local questions necessarily implies a State's right to be wrong occasionally. My own State of Indiana has been wrong in my judgment many times in its own administration. I dare say other states have been wrong at times.

The State of Nevada may be wrong in its legalizing gambling and paying the Governor's salary out of the proceeds of its Monte Carlo. The State of Illinois may be wrong in establishing or disestablishing the segregation of races in its public schools and public conveyances. But whether it is gambling in Nevada, or segregation in Mississippi, it is the right of the state to decide whether it is wrong or right.

When God Almighty endowed each and every one of His creatures with freedom of the will, it was a foregone conclusion that some of them would use their freedom to commit sins, errors, trespasses, as well as virtues. And we must concede when we are speaking of personal rights, the rights of States, the rights to make those decisions according to their local lights, and that is what the founding fathers intended, and that is what the Tenth Amendment means, and the Constitution is a travesty and a scrap of paper unless we have the courage to enforce it as such.

Now the calendar indicates that we are far along on the history of liberty in this country. All of us can see the fateful day approaching. The obligation that rests upon us here this evening is not an obligation to talk about State's Rights, not an obligation merely to cheer references to them. We have heard a lot of talk about State's Rights—the time has arrived now here in Memphis to do something about them. I think that one of the greatest evils present in this country today, one of the greatest menaces to the perpetuity of our great civilization, is not the menace of communism, however great and menacing it may be—a greater menace to the perpetuation of our liberties, to the safety and freedom of our children is the great cancer of complacency and apathy that afflicts the people of this country. We need, in other words, a wholesale revival of understanding with references to constitutional principles. We need to understand those principles free from prejudice and self interest, free from anything except the public interest, and this we can have if we refurbish and cleanse ourselves of all selfish motives, and look the problem square in the face. We must examine our constitutional conscience; and remember this, that the principles of constitutional liberty can never be preserved by people who are in ignorance of those principles. Education is required, but in America it has been demonstrated ever since the Constitution was born, there is one form of political education which is indispensable to the proper progress of political action.

The people will understand what they are asked to vote for on election day and the great tragedy of the bi-partisan carbon-copy conspiracy that is presented to us today is that all of the important constitutional issues are suppressed, silenced and obscured, and so in order to educate the American people to the dangers which threaten our constitutional system, we must have not merely political discussion and political action, but we must nominate, endorse, call it what you will, a candidate for President who stands for the independence of the United States against World Government: we must nominate a candidate who pledges himself to do away with the evil waste of foreign aid; we must nominate a candidate who is pledged prior to all of these things as a basic prerequisite for the preservation of Constitutional Government all down the line to preserve the 10th Amendment and Constitutional rights of the States of the Union.

There is no way to do this academically. If neither one of the carbon-copy candidates has the courage to speak on the subject of State's Rights, then the people of the country must speak on that subject. If neither of the carbon-copy candidates has the courage to speak out either for or against the Bricker Amendment, to prevent the envelopment of the independence of this country into the snares of World Government, then the people of America must speak on it.

The Constitution of the United States does not say that the people of America are obliged to accept the lesser of two evils anywhere, any place, any time. On the contrary, the Constitution of the United States says in plain terms that each state of the Union shall select in whatever manner the legislatures of those states shall direct, presidential electors, who shall choose a President of the United States of America.

The Constitution of this country says nothing about political extravagances that we have come to know as National conventions. The Constitution says that we are not subjected to bi-partisan combines which eradicates for popular discussion and popular decision, the real important issues of this day. The Constitution says that the virtue of this Republic is in self-government by the people, through the States according to Constitutional Law. So we need through political action, through the candidacy of forthright patriots, men who are willing to come forward, to be counted, to be shot at. We need, in other words, to resort to forthright patriots who have expressed themselves courageously, confidently and with determination on these issues—men like T. Coleman Andrews and Thomas Werdel.

My friends, what is constitutional government? (Voice: "LIBERTY") Right, my friend; spoken like a founding father. It was George Washington himself who said that government is like fire, a dangerous servant, a fearful master. My friends, the founding fathers of this Republic knew that Government is like fire. Government is precisely like fire. There is nothing so much like fire as government, and vice versa.

Fire is an essential ingredient of civilization. Without fire we would still literally physically, and scientifically be in the dark ages. Fire is what has lighted up, energized and motivated the world. Fire is a necessary, useful thing, but once it is out of control, fire is the most dangerous and destructive agency on earth. "Government is like fire," said Washington. "We fear fire and" he said, "we should fear government." Here and all over the country, we still fear fire. In this auditorium we still fear government. Fire, when it is controlled, when it is held under what is supposed to be cooked, whether in blast furnace or in a cook stove, fire is always surrounded by iron walls, and watched, vigilantly watched, and whenever fire escapes from these iron walls, when it leaks over its containing barriers, it becomes a destructive conflagration, the most destructive, catastrophic agency on earth. Government is like fire, and the founding fathers knowing this, took the fire of government that they lighted in the Declaration of Independence for the first time in human history, and they encased that fire of government behind the iron walls of the constitutional system. They separated those fires of government and put them in different places, in states of the Union, in local governments, in counties, in cities. They took a very little bit of the fire and put it in a place called Washington, D.C. a very little bit of the fire—and by strict constitutional limitations, and by deliberately constructed fire walls, they separated these fires one from another—the fire in Tennessee, the fire in Indiana, the fire in Memphis, the fire in Nashville.

The whole basis of our political science was a separation, a check and balance, between the fires of government as they burned in the various areas of our political domain—and that was the secret of our liberty. Keep the fires of government separated; keep them checked and balanced one against the other, and we would be safe from a conglomeration of tyranny. It was 1912, when Woodrow Wilson said, "A concentration of governmental power is what always precedes the death of human freedom." And after 1912, significantly, the fires of government, which had been separated, checked and balanced throughout the country, began to be consolidated in Washington. The blaze of power in Washington built up higher and higher and became more and more destructive until today it threatens to scorch and singe the liberty of everybody in the land. The American people have sat idly by and watched this conglomeration of centralized fire go on without challenge or contest.

We have been urged by international Socialists not to fear fire of Government, but to worship it, to amalgamate it, to centralize it, to warm ourselves upon and with it, to trust it absolutely. And in the last 20 years particularly, in the federal Executive, in the federal Congress, and last but not least in the federal courts, the sacredness of this centralized fire in Washington has been accentuated and underscored to a point that today everybody in this country lives fearfully in the shadow of the Federal Giant without any rights you can expect this Federal Government upon petition to respect.

Some months ago a man who had been Collector of Federal Income Taxes, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue under the present President of the United States, suddenly abdicated his responsibility, and told the American people, the truth: "The root of this omnipotent power," he said, "The thing that gives the Federal Government its ever-widening scope, its ever-tightening grip of despotic centralization, is the federal income tax. It ought to be destroyed." For having had the courage to put his finger upon the root of all this evil, this gentleman was criticized by the powers that be. BUT for having had that courage and common sense, we here, in this State's Rights Conference will, I hope, endorse him for President of the United States. As T. Coleman Andrews has said, "Unlimited money is unlimited power." When the Federal Government has the unlimited, unrestricted, unrestrained power to scrape the last dollar of your income out of your pocket and give it to the King of Cambodia, or anybody else they can think of, then it is useless to talk about constitutional limitation. If the Congress has the unlimited power to tax and to spend for any purpose on earth, then not only the 10th Amendment but every article and section of the Constitution of the United States, has been repealed, and it is not because anybody is penurious that they wish to attack the root of this evil, not because any of us are badgered or hounded by the income tax collector that we wish to get rid of it. Those are personal selfish gripes that we have against this iniquitous, immoral banditry that is called the Federal Income Tax. But there is a more general, more all-pervading, more convincing reason why we are against it. The Federal income tax is an unlimited right in the Federal Government to take the last dollar from any American anywhere in the country and that unlimited right means unlimited power in the Federal Government. The unlimited power of the Federal Government means the destruction of States Rights and personal liberties. That is why we must destroy the income tax.

Of course people write to me, four or five thousand every week, because I am unfortunate enough to be addicted to a radio program, and say: "This is the height of irresponsibility; you propose to repeal the federal income tax. Where is Congress going to get the money if you repeal the Federal Income Tax?" I answer it categorically: They ain't agoing to get it.

And now when we propose to stop this, the bandits tell us, you cannot stop the federal income tax until you find some better way to support the King of Cambodia. My friends, if the federal income tax is inherently immoral, iniquitous, discriminatory, and as T. Coleman Andrews says, it was conceived in Marxian class conscious vengeance, then regardless of alternatives, this immoral, iniquitous thing must be stopped. Let nobody accuse us of irresponsibility.

I have heard from Bob Chandler and other excellent lawyers all over the country, with suggestions as to what we can do about this income tax. This idea is not mine but comes to me from the best legal brains in the country. He wrote up an amendment and it goes something like this. Five years after the ratification of this Amendment by the states of the Union, it will be unlawful for Congress to levy an income tax upon anybody's income anywhere in America. Congress will have five years to cut out its extravagance, to rearrange its budget, and to find a legitimate, moral substitute, and if Congress can't do that in five years, it certainly should not have the unlimited right to spend the unlimited income of the American people for five minutes.

For a good many years I had the pleasure of teaching American history, and for a good many years before that, I had the pleasure of reading it. I still love to read it. But it gives me more pleasure to make it. And we are going to make it here, tonight.

Another question which has been addressed to this conference and which requires an answer is this: "How effective can these extra-party activities be? Why, this is a rock-ribbed two-party country. Third parties, extra parties, new parties, are un-American, ineffective purposeless." Well, let's go to American history and see what has happened with reference to that assertion. My friends, exactly one hundred years ago, an institution was born in this country which has come to be known as the Republican Party. The Republican Party was born in the election of 1856, crowded the existing Whig Party, which was the second party, out of second place, and four years later, in 1860, the Republican Party won the election with Abraham Lincoln. But, people forget when Lincoln won that election in 1860, there were four political parties in that field, and each one of these four candidates received electoral votes, and one of them was from Tennessee. There were four candidates, not two, in 1860. Of course, for 20 years after the Civil War the Republican Party had it their own way. And we didn't have anything like two parties in this country, but 20 years after the Civil War the renewal of duplication of parties began and from 1880 down to 1932 we not only had two parties, we had 3, 4, 5, and 6 parties contending in Presidential elections.

Of course in 1932 the Socialists merged with the Democrats, then after that they left the left-field to Earl Browder and Henry Wallace. But has it ever occurred to you to explain why both parties are now so close together on the matter of international socialism? It is precisely, my friends, because of the activity of the so-called third parties in this century. All of the activities on the part of the third parties was leftist, Socialists, Communists, Marxists, Progressive. The activities of these parties were constantly pulling these parties to the left, to the left, and to the left. And now the time has come for extra-party activity to pull one, two parties, perhaps both of them, or at least a new party, to the right, toward the Constitution. And with courage and with determination we can do it.

We have a lot of vacuum to be created on the moral right of Constitutional principle and we expect to fill that vacuum this Fall.

I came to Memphis with many misgivings. I go away heartened, enthusiastic, confident.

It has been said that the Lord helps those who help themselves. Tonight—tomorrow—we here in the State's Rights conference plan to map a procedure whereby we can help ourselves back to the Constitution and to Liberty. I am confident as I am standing here that the good Lord will help us to do it.

UNITED STATES DAY

And because of Executive agreements and treaties, many of them secret, our nation has already lost many of its sovereign rights. And if present trends are not checked by loyal American citizens, the Internationalists will soon make of the United States a second rate nation—or worse still, surrender its sovereignty to the United Nations or some other World Organization dominated by our enemies.

FLY THE UNITED STATES FLAG

And No Other,

THE TIME HAS COME FOR ALL LOYAL PATRIOTIC CITIZENS TO STAND AND BE COUNTED!

It is not enough for us to remember the virtues of our constitutional form of government and the dangers already undermining it:

We must recognize the tremendous propaganda machine that is attacking our way of life and meet it head on.

First we must face the fact that the internationalists in the godless, alien-controlled United Nations, through UNESCO, together with those in government positions, aided by the tax-free endowed funds of foundations, have an almost unlimited amount of money at their disposal for propaganda purposes and that they are making good use of it to brainwash the American people against the ideals that have made the United States great, and in favor of socialist and internationalist ideas.

They have entered every educational agency, the press, radio, television, schools, women's clubs, civic organizations, and even the churches. Their propaganda is literally flooding every avenue to the mind of man, woman, and child. And the only possible chance to offset the erroneous information they are proclaiming, is to meet them on every field of battle, and give the people the truth. Truth will win the battle for the minds of people. But it will take the cooperative efforts of all patriotic persons. We face a mighty foe. But with TRUTH as our sword, and the Author of TRUTH as our Helper, we cannot fail.

We have to be prepared for unfair attacks. This has been the method used by those opposing all patriots and patriotic groups. They use a smear campaign against all who put the interests of the United States above every other nation. They call such persons or groups, Extreme Rightists, Super Patriots, or even Hate Groups, though most patriotic persons and groups are neither extreme nor hate groups. We do not hate even our enemies; but we do love this land we are glad to call our own, and we want to keep it the wonderful land it has always been, the land of the FREE and home of the BRAVE.

Can This Be Done?

The answer rests with the patriotic men and women and young people throughout the United States of America. Concerted action alone can win.

Study To Know The Truth About:

1. The dangers inherent in the United Nations or any other world organization that submerges the nation.

2. The danger in well planned propaganda against American ideals and the patriotic persons and organizations who defend the United States—propaganda in text books, comic strips, news articles, TV programs, radio announcers, subversive organizations, and fellow-travelers in high places in Church and State.

Do Something About It! Day In And Day Out Throughout The Year!

Support Persons And Movements:

1. Attend public meetings and speak your mind.
2. Vote your conviction on all issues.
3. Write letters to news columns.
4. Write letters to your Congressmen:
 - a. Approving patriotic efforts:
 - b. Disapproving un-American stands.
5. Join with other patriotic persons in the community to preserve American ideals in community, state and nation.
6. Expose "United Nations Day" for what it is—a day of infamy and shame when Stalin's Reds formally ratified a permanent alliance with the United States by ratifying the Charter of the United Nations.

HELP RALLY THE FORCES IN YOUR COMMUNITY TO OBSERVE UNITED STATES DAY OCTOBER 23

Groups of America-loving people everywhere should band themselves together to observe this day in their communities

—by doing anything and everything possible to rekindle in the hearts of the people their love and enthusiasm for their own United States;

—by having meetings, parades, and radio programs;

—by helping organize our young people for activity in patriotic programs;

—by taking the message of our country's greatness to schools and colleges;

—by forming committees to take the lead in arranging programs locally.

The Constitution Party or States Rights groups are already on the ballot in Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Arkansas, New Mexico, Maryland, New Jersey, Tennessee, Connecticut, South Carolina, Iowa, Wisc., Florida—others may yet be added.

If independent electors representing these two Patriots are on the ballot in your State, vote for them and ask your friends to vote for them.

If the independent electors are not on the ballot in your State, write in the names of these Patriots.

If your State laws do not permit a write-in, then vote for all candidates except the electors for both Republican and Democratic Parties.

Register your protest against these former two parties which have been merged and are shadowboxing, while directed by international Marxist conspirators.

Above we give addresses in 29 States, which will gladly give you further information. Contact the one nearest you and cooperate in building a strong voting organization to help save our great country. Help stop this trend toward Communism!
